Politics Lori Vihtoriainen Cambridge Analytica, the company accused of harvesting data from 50 million Facebook profiles for use in Donald Trump's 2016 campaign, has been struggling to establish legal protections for its data in the United States as it tries to enter the market for political ad services. A new filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission this week hinted that the company might be willing to sacrifice the appearance of legitimacy to resolve the lingering threat of criminal charges, according to documents obtained by The Intercept. The company wants to begin providing political data analytics services to U.S. political campaigns and political parties, according to the filing, and first wants to demonstrate that its data does not violate the privacy of Facebook users. "If we fail to satisfy investors with respect to the PRIVACY CONCERNS described above, however, it may become more difficult to obtain the financing needed to complete the planned Transaction," according to the filing, which would create a new company called Cambridge Analytica LLC, headquartered in the United States. Cambridge Analytica developed software that mined Facebook profiles in order to obtain psychological information on the users, using the data in a psychological profiling application. One of the firm's chief executives told British newspaper The Guardian last year that the company collected information from the profiles of millions of people with the alleged consent of the users. The firm's vice president in charge of data, Dr. Alex Tayler, told the U.K.'s Observer newspaper that the firm did not break any laws, nor did it ever mine data without a user's consent. He also said Cambridge Analytica did not use Facebook's information for any purpose other than to make more relevant political advertising. The company says it did not use Facebook's information for any "purpose of targeting individuals" in the U.S., despite allegations that it used the data for such purposes. The firm's filing shows that its chief executive, Alexander Nix, met with Cambridge University psychologists Dr. Michal Kosinski and Dr. Paul Morris in May 2015, and that he "orally committed [him]self to the PRIVACY CONCERNS." The filing says that the company "promised Drs. Kosinski and Morris that we would satisfy them with respect to the PRIVACY CONCERNS." A day after that

The expression of Ly6C is induced by the primary inflammatory signal from tumor cells within the lymph nodes. We previously reported a novel cellular interaction between tumor cells and macrophages. This study focuses on further evaluation of this interaction. To study the mechanism of this interaction, we have analyzed the distribution of macrophages that had been previously isolated from tumor-draining lymph nodes (TDLNs). This was achieved by using the two-photon system to determine whether resident macrophages, which were migrated from the tumor-draining lymph nodes, were different from macrophages that had been attracted to the tumor cells within the TDLNs. We used a mouse xenograft model to evaluate the interaction between the tumor cells and macrophages. We found that the numbers of recruited macrophages within tumor nodules and the mRNA expression levels of the Ly6C (CD54) gene were significantly increased in the TDLNs of mice bearing tumor compared with naive control mice. We also found that CD54+ cells were significantly increased in tumor nodules in the TDLNs of mice compared with naive control mice. Using time-lapse microscopy, we also found that CD54+ cells were not chemotactically attracted toward tumor cells. Thus, our results suggested that the expression of Ly6C in macrophages is induced by the primary signal of tumor cells, through which these macrophages migrated to tumor nodules within the TDLNs. Inflation pressures from higher oil prices That's the key statement from Deloitte Money, a Canadian consumer protection organization. "[Oil prices] have moved higher, and that's really because of the very strong demand that we've seen across markets in Canada and around the world," says Christine Tardiff, Money's senior director of consumer protection, in an interview with CBC News. "We've had a really strong month, a strong year, for sure," she adds. "No matter where you are in the world, the price for oil has risen dramatically." According to Bank of Canada governor Stephen Poloz, inflation in Canada has been "more than a little bit below the 2 per cent target we've been focusing on, so it's certainly soft." He stressed that he's been surprised by the strength of the inflation performance from May to July, with a
